ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE

The origin of the unusual roof shape of this house is uncertain. In all respects except the roof line, the house is similar to the Mansard cottages immediately to the south and it was built at a similar date. Perhaps the roof represents remodeling of an earlier mansard roof, or simply the preference of the original builder.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Unlike most of the other Mansard cottages on this block, which were built as rental properties, this house seems to have been owner-occupied, at least when it was first built: in 1876 the owner was a Mrs. Turner. By 1898, however, this house was owned by George W. Sampson, an insurance agent who lived elsewhere in town, so the house was probably rented as it also was in 1906 when owned by George H. Jackson, one of the largest property owners in this section of town.
